Our job as plumbers is to protect the health of the nation. At this point in history becoming vaccinated is one of the few things within our power to reduce the spread of this disease. As a trade we have lost our focus as to our original mission of bringing the human race to a higher level. After generations of students who couldn't cut the mustard academically being funneled into all of the trades we are suffering with a lack of intellectual power in our ranks. Science is feared by the ignorant which leads to an ignorance of science.

I would probably say about 90% or more of the local 12 workers have been vaccinated due to the fact the hospitals will not allow anyone to work in the hospital unless they are vaccinated. I feel like it's a violation against their civil rights, but I've been told by my attorney that you can force anyone to get vaccinated or terminate their employment

We also are not going to mandate vaccines in our company unless we are forced to do so by government mandate. We have a list of vaccinated/unvaccinated employees on our service and installation divisions, and we will dispatch them as necessary per customer requests.

So far, so good with that plan. In the end, our employees trust, and comfort are more important than a few lost jobs. My 2 cents.

We do all commercial works and several of our customers are requiring vaccinations to enter their facilities. We sent a memo out strongly suggesting people get vaccinated, but not mandated at this time. Within that memo was a note that there may be time off if we can't place them anywhere that doesn't mandate people be vaccinated or provide a negative COVID test.

The majority of our people are vaccinated but if this trend continues, we may have to mandate it now that the vaccination is officially FDA approved

I agree with the way they are handling the situation. The only thing I don't agree with is that it is a good idea to get vaccinated. My position on this is that if we all stick with the American way and let people make up their own mind then the consumers may find that they don't have the right to dictate how we live our lives because there will be not enough companies to service these stupid people!

Let's stick together and say to those demanding that we have all our people get vaccinated....."I understand how you feel, however, we do not feel that we have the right to dictate how our employees want to live their lives. If you would like to continue, we will have all workers in your home wear masks. If that is not to your liking...I respect your position to search for another option.

I, nor do many other people choose to live our lives in fear. And that is exactly what our current administration is pushing. This pandemic has proven there are a lot of weak, insecure sheep out there with no common sense

We have a list of employees that are vaccinated with copies of their cards that we will provide to any customers that request it.

The list was voluntary to anyone that wanted.
